The majority of the people attending either the monthly or bi-monthly meetings were operators or designers responsible for the plant's operation. The other attendees were engineers, the plant manager, and a few other people. But a good thing is, operators actually do a lot of work, so the observations were a lot more useful than they are in a typical plant. They also talked a lot about the plant's operation, and that was helpful.

MASINLOC BIDDING

Solon questions power plant sale to RP-Aussie group

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

AN ADMINISTRATION lawmaker yesterday expressed grave doubts on the financial capability of a little-known Filipino-Australian consortium to make good its $561-million bid for the Masinloc coal power plant which President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo has touted as a "landmark accomplishment."

Albay Rep. Joey Salceda said that, since financial capability was the sole prequalification for the bidding, he was surprised how a Filipino corporation with a paid-up capitalization of P600,000 (YNN Corp. owned by Sunny Sun) and its Australian partner with a market capitalization of only $10 million (Green Pacific Energy Ltd.) was allowed to bid for one of the government's most prized power plants.

Financial muscle

But Power Sector Assets and Liabilities Management Corp. (PSALM) chief executive officer Raphael Lotilla told the bidders that the government was confident that the YNN consortium had the financial muscle to carry out the deal. Lotilla claimed that the critics wanted the bidding to fail so that the government could put Masinloc on the auction block anew.

Salceda said he was dismayed that the government did not properly screen the bidders for Masinloc which only attracted two bidders as the top guns in the industry, led by Mirant Corp. and Korea Electric Power Corp., pulled out at the last minute.

He said the government might have felt the need to rush the bidding to make a good pitch to credit rating agencies that have warned the Philippines of a credit downgrade due to its lack of credibility in solving the fiscal crisis.

Salceda claimed that immediately after YNN-Green Pacific had won the bidding for the 600-megawatt coal power plant in Zambales last week, the consortium peddled the deal to other power companies and banks to come up with its bid that was more than what the government had anticipated.

"The Masinloc sale could turn out to be another 'embarrassing fiasco' if we are not careful. There appears to be serious lapses in procedural and substantial requirements. It's a bad oversight," Salceda said.

He said he would recommend to the President to put the project on a watch list and take remedial action to "save us from further loss of credibility."

But the government, however, quickly doused emerging doubts about the winning bidder's financial capacity. Based on documents furnished by the Australian company's investment banker, Credit Suisse First Boston, Lotilla said Green Pacific's parent, Great Pacific, had a controlling interest in the 24-megawatt Taixing Huangqiao coal-fired plant in China and mining interests in Australia.

Lotilla said the company's founder, Alfred Wong, held executive management positions in leading financial institutions and banks in Australia, such as the Capital Financial Group and State Bank NSW.

$9 million

Lotilla said that if the YNN consortium fails to come up with the money, the government would still gain $9 million from the standby letter of credit that all bidders were required to submit before the bidding.

"The bidders were asked to risk something even before they made a bid," he said.

Lotilla said the government had to wait for the consent of the multilateral creditors of National Power Corp. such as the World Bank and Asian Development Bank before taking the first payment from the YNN consortium (40 percent down payment and the balance payable in two years).

"We're putting pressure on multilaterals to proceed with privatization. We told them we did this without any help," he said.
